OUR FRONTISPIECE

LOUIS J. BAILEY

By Dorothy E. Smith

"To be a librarian the first requisites are to like books and to like people." How many times have you heard that advice — and given it? In Louis J. Bailey you find it in action and in large measure, for he is a friendly connoisseur. Perhaps his liking for people started with his boyhood in Ontario, New York, where his father ran the general store. After school and during vacations and holidays young Louis J. (J as in Jonathan) used to wait on the customers, measuring out the sugar and the coffee on demand. Who says they were not happy days?

With the exception of three years when the Bailey family lived in Rochester, Louis attended the local country schools in Ontario. It was those three years in Rochester that gave him his first real opportunity to indulge his taste for books; his school work was so well done that his Principal gave him permission to use the Public Library. It meant a three-mile walk. When he arrived he found closed stacks protected by a wicket gate. Undaunted he demanded Drummond's "Ascent of Man" — and got it. During his high school days he met a Wayne County girl who was attending the recently established library school in Albany. From what she told him about it Louis J. Bailey knew that he, too, wanted to be a librarian. In his senior year he wrote to Albany for their catalog. Armed with this he entered the University of Rochester where he earned his tuition by acting as page in the college library. Due to the peculiarities of entrance requirements, and lacking Cicero and Vergil, he entered with French and German instead of Latin and one modern language. This meant that he had to take the scientific instead of the classical course, so he majored in geology. And the geology professor was greatly annoyed with him for persisting in his determination to be a librarian when he was so eminently fitted to go to Washington in the Geological Survey Department. But remember, he had read the "Ascent of Man" when he was in the eighth grade; he was more interested in folks than in fossils. In his senior year at college he sent in his application to the New York State Library School at Albany.

Curiously enough Albany referred him to the same Wayne County girl — married now and a loss to the profession, as was the way of the world in 1903. She told him still more about the school, wrote a letter of recommendation, and gave him all of her library-school note books.

After completing the two-year course, he remained in Albany as a general assistant in the New York State Library until 1907. Then for a year he was an assistant in the Copyright Division of the Library of Congress. It is not surprising that from there he entered the public library field where he could work more directly with people. He was in the mill town of Gary, Indiana, from 1908–1922. The unusual system of cooperation between public library and public schools that he inaugurated was the talk of the profession at the time and has been a source of inspiration since then. But that is not all he did in Gary. When he and Mrs. Bailey arrived they found a town of sand and scattered buildings. For the first four months they lived in the rear of the library which was a store building. Mr. Bailey recognized history in the making when he saw it, and began almost immediately to assemble what is now a fine collection of material on Gary and northwestern Indiana.

Then came World War I and Mr. Bailey secured a leave of absence from January, 1918, to March, 1920, to enter war service under the direction of the A. L. A. He was librarian and supervisor at Camps Shelby, Sheridan, and McClelland. Later he was dispatch agent in New York City and was responsible for getting books overseas and to camps in the United States. When he resigned from Gary in 1922 the original little library had been replaced by a large central library and two branch buildings besides ten branches in rented quarters.

From Gary to Flint, Michigan, was a short leap. Here again he had the children's interests at heart and started a service similar to that in Gary. He remained in Flint four years, but Indiana wanted him back as Director of the State Library in 1926. A short time previously the State Legislature had consolidated the Public Library Commission and the State Library, both housed in the State House. There had been talk and agitation about a new library building but when Mr. Bailey arrived in Indianapolis it was all very nebulous; nothing had gelled. His work was cut out for him and he began a systematic campaign to consolidate public opinion and to get legislative and gubernatorial support. It took three years. In March, 1929, the state legislature passed the tax bill which provided one million dollars for the new building. Just under the wire it was, for in October, 1929, came the Crash. Then came the fun of planning the building. This experience has made him one of the recognized authorities on library buildings in the United States. In the summer of 1934, the year his own new building was dedicated, he was called to Washington as a consultant on the stack equipment of the National Archives Building, and in March, 1935, he was appointed as library consultant for the new library of the United States Department of the Interior.

In 1936 he was appointed Chief Librarian of The Queens Borough Public Library — one of the three public libraries of Greater New York. Although the new central library had been completed six years earlier, he has had an outlet for his interest in building through the remodeling of branches with funds and labor supplied by the Works Progress Administration and the building of an eleven-tier book stack with a capacity of 300,000 volumes. And the Long Island Collection of local historical material is always sure of his understanding support.

One cannot do all that he has done without being asked to do more. It is to be expected, therefore that the mere listing of his extra-curricular activities would fill a deal of space. He has been a member of the A. L. A. Council for many terms; he has been chairman of ten important A. L. A. committees; he has been President of the Indiana Library Association, the Michigan Library Association, the New York Library Association, and of the National Association of State Libraries. He is a Fellow of the American Library Institute. He was editor of Library Occurrent and has contributed to library periodicals. In February, 1943, he was appointed National Coordinator of the Victory Book Campaign. Selection was made by the A. L. A., the United Service Organization, and the American Red Cross.

While he was in Washington in 1907 he married Regnea Gunnison whom he had known in his college days in Rochester. Of the four children, three of them at present are up to their eyes in war work; John is a radio engineer, Beatrice is at the Sperry Gyroscope Factory on Long Island, and Richard was last heard from on Bataan. Horace, the youngest, is still at home helping his father start the new garden — "mums" and tulips are their peace-time specialties.

Louis J. Bailey is a bibliophile at heart. In his recently purchased home the architect's plans provided for a Whoopee room in the basement. With book shelves on all sides it has been appropriated by him for his personal library and treasures. Here is his collection of Thomas Hardy's works. He specializes in Hardy first editions. Here is his unusually fine collection of book-plates with data about them and their designers. Here are books of all sorts that he keeps because he likes them; some because of their content or illustrations, others because they are fine examples of printing or book-making. Here, too, is the place for Cobweb. Cobweb I was a lovely Persian lady who died in Flint. Cobweb II was another Persian who, unfortunately, was run over when the automobile was backing out of the garage in Indianapolis. Cobweb III used to wake him up climbing into his second-story window in the middle of the night. One night she failed to come, nor has she since been seen. Last Christmas Santa Claus brought Cobweb IV. There is always a Cobweb on the hearth.

At library parties he is always on his toes, calling the square dances, swinging his partner, or doing the grand right and left. Whether with his books, with his cat, or with people you will find him unassuming, natural, approachable. "Friendly" is the word for Louis J. Bailey.

WALT WHITMAN BIBLIOGRAPHY, 1935-1942

Compiled by Gay Wilson Allen
Associate Professor of English
Bowling Green State University, Bowling Green, Ohio

The items listed below form a supplement to my "Walt Whitman Bibliography, 1918–1934," published serially in the Bulletin of Bibliography from September to April, 1934–35, later collected and issed as Bulletin of Bibliography Pamphlets, No. 30. The demand for this bibliography has been so encouraging that a revision seems to be needed.

GERTRUDE STEIN (1874-)

A Check-list comprising Critical and Miscellaneous Writings about her Work, Life and Personality from 1913-1942

By Julian Sawyer

This check-list is actually a supplement to my recent Gertrude Stein A Bibliography, Arrow Editions, N. Y., 1941; although most of the articles and reviews included in it are as hollow and as irrelevant as they are derogatory and stupid I have felt it necessary to make this compilation for the sake of those future readers and students of Miss Stein's writings who will inevitably wish to consult some of this gathered material about her. I have chosen only those reviews of Miss Stein's books as well as criticisms of the 1934 Hartford, New York and Chicago presentation of her Four Saints in Three Acts An Opera to be Sung which I have deemed worthy of inclusion; other reviews of Miss Stein's books as well as criticisms of this presentation may be found in the Book Review Digest for 1910, 1923, 1929, 1933-7 and 1939-41 and in The Reader's Guide to Periodical Literature for 1926-41. And I have starred those items, whether favorable or unfavorable, which I have personally believed to be of comparative import. Incidentally, such a work as Ernest Fenollosa's The Chinese Written Character as a Medium for Poetry, An Ars Poetica, With a Foreword and Notes by Ezra Pound, Arrow Editions, N. Y., 1936 says more, both in general and in particular, about Miss Stein's 'ideogramic method' than most of the series recorded below, Mr. Fenollosa conclusively though unwittingly establishing the ultimate analogy of Steinese and Chinese. Since this check-list presumably contains errata and undoubtedly contains omissions I will be grateful to all those who acquaint me with them.

Northwest Passage. New York, Doubleday, Doran, 1937. 709 p.

The central figure of this historical novel is Major Robert Rogers, American Ranger commander who led the expedition to St. Francis, Indian town, in 1759, and whose dream was to find the Northwest passage to the Pacific. The story is told by Langdon Towne, whose ambition was to paint the Indians as they really were. The book is divided into three sections, the first, the expedition to St. Francis, the second, an interlude in London, and the third, Major Rogers as governor of Michilimackinac and his subsequent downfall.
